

How To Deal With A Road Accident

It happens quickly. One moment, you're driving while completely unaware of what is about to occur. The next, you're involved in a road accident. The experience can be a jolt to your mind. It's often unclear what you should do. But, don't panic. Stop your car and get out when it's safe to do so. Below, we're going to provide you with the steps you should take when you need to deal with a road accident.

Gather Witnesses First, talk to a few people who witnessed the collision. Their perspective from the side of the road or from another vehicle can prove valuable. They can often provide you with details that aren't obvious to you or the other driver.

Exchange Details With The Other Driver You'll need to exchange information with the other driver. That includes your name and address as well as your vehicle registration number and insurance information. If, for some reason, these details are not exchanged at the scene of the road accident, you need to file a report with the police within 24 hours (this should be done in person). Keep in mind that if the other driver or someone else involved in the road accident asks you for your details, you must provide them. Otherwise, it may be considered a legal offence.

Take Photographs Of The Scene And Damage Sometimes, people remember the facts surrounding a collision differently over time. Memory fades and things aren't as clear as they were at the time of the accident. If possible, take photographs of the scene. Also, take photographs of any damage done to vehicles or property involved in the collision. These can prove invaluable in the event of a dispute.

What To Do If Someone Is Injured If someone is injured during a road accident in which you're directly involved, immediately call 911. Be prepared to provide them with your location, details surround the event, the number of people who are injured and whether they're currently breathing. The more quickly you can provide this information to the 911 operator, the more quickly they can send someone to assist. The key to dealing with a road accident is to avoid panicking. As long as you know the steps you need to take, you can help ensure that an otherwise traumatic experience can be resolved quickly. Gather your witnesses and exchange your details with the other driver. Then, take photographs of the scene. If someone is hurt, call 911 and provide the operator with any details they request. Being involved in a collision is a horrible feeling. But, with a little planning, you can deal with it and get your life back on track.
